Bill:

This is the HRTF Report critique we discussed several weeks ago. It was prepared at my request by those within OMS most knowledgeable of the issues and techniques involved.

While my personal expertise does not allow this specific a response, my experience is that reports which combine catchy rhetoric with sparse evidence generally are not based on solid but unreported data.

Re our earlier discussions on pay-for-performance, I'm sure that my "flat earth" friends were less concerned that we will sail off the edge than that we risk scurvy in any event unless we bring along some limes. If you are still inclined to have an informal session with these folks at some point, it would be very welcomed.
